

New Documentary Segment “The Hill” Released, Chronicling Culmination of 179-Mile Long Walk for Pediatric Cancer

Congressman Brendan Boyle met with Latanya Morrison and others from ABF at the culmination of the Long walk for Pediatric Cancer.

Washington, D.C. — January 3, 2026 — The Ahmad Butler Foundation (ABF) announced the release of The Hill, a new documentary segment capturing the final leg and culmination of The Long Walk for Pediatric Cancer, a 179-mile peaceful advocacy walk from Philadelphia to Washington, D.C. calling attention to the urgent need for increased pediatric cancer research funding.

Produced by David Goodman of Humanity Pictures, in collaboration with Nicole Amelio-Casper of Amelio Media, The Hill documents the final stretch of the walk and the historic outcomes achieved upon arrival in the nation's capital.

At the culminating event in Washington, D.C., Congressman Brendan Boyle publicly committed to personally introducing the Ahmad Butler Pediatric Cancer Hope for a Cure Act in Congress, marking a major legislative breakthrough for families impacted by childhood cancer nationwide.

In recognition of the advocacy efforts led by Latanya Morrison and the Ahmad Butler Foundation, Congressman Boyle's office also presented ABF with a Congressional Proclamation, honoring the walk and the organization's unwavering commitment to pediatric cancer awareness, research equity, and legislative reform.

Adding to the momentum, Congressman Rob Bresnahan attended the event and pledged his support, stating that he will work collaboratively with Congressman Boyle's office to advance the Ahmad Butler Pediatric Cancer Hope for a Cure Act.

"This moment represents more than the end of a walk; it marks the beginning of real congressional action for children and families who have been overlooked for far too long," said Latanya Morrison, executive director of the Ahmad Butler Foundation. "We are deeply grateful for Congressman Boyle's leadership and Congressman Bresnahan's commitment to standing with us."

ABF and Latanya Morrison also delivered a petition signed by more than 600 families across 29 states to Congressman Bresnahan, urging Congress to reject proposed pediatric cancer research funding cuts and prioritize lifesaving investments for children fighting cancer.

The walk, which drew supporters, advocates, and media attention along its route, was organized in response to longstanding disparities in pediatric cancer research funding and recent threats of additional cuts. Participants carried a unified message calling on Congress to prioritize children with cancer and ensure equitable federal investment in lifesaving research.

The Hill serves as a documentary record of the completed walk and the legislative progress achieved, preserving the voices, determination, and impact of families and advocates who carried this message directly to Capitol Hill.
